Piano In The Wild

Grand Piano + Wilderness + Endurance Concerts

ABOUT PITW

Piano In The Wild is a project that utilizes endurance concerts on a grand piano in areas of protected and threatened wilderness to advocate for stewardship and conservation. Each performance is completed over the course of an entire day (sunrise-to-sunset) or night (sunset-to-sunrise) and consists of music inspired by the inherent beauty of the Natural space.

Will Munroe, In His Own Words

"Piano In The Wild is an act of devotion. Nature is being threatened in so many ways. By reporting, in real time and in the universal language of music, the experience of Nature, on her terms and in her time scale, I want to provide a curiosity for the focused observation of Nature. In Nature, and her wealth of symbolism, there is hope for us to regain our fluency in the language of Earth. There is also an opportunity to self-reflect.

Sometimes I feel an emptiness, a common occurrence in these stressful times. Through this project I have come to realize that any emptiness I feel is a concert hall ready for Nature's symphony - there will always be a part of me that is available to Nature's will, teachings, and revelations - there is always a part of you too. The more we can learn that that sensation of emptiness or hopelessness is an opportunity to grow with the help of something bigger than ourselves."
